THE THEATRE.

Macbeth on the Stage.

IN TWO PARTS.—PART I.

BY FREDERICK HAWKINS.

NOT the least convincing proof of the eminence won in different ways by Mr. Irving is supplied by the special interest he arouses in any old play that takes a place in his repertory. Like Warwick, he might boast that he makes his favourite reign. His revivals of "Hamlet," for example, gave a strong impulse among thinking and educated men to the study of that tragedy, and what he has done for "Faust" is indicated in part by an enormous increase of the sales of translations of the masterpiece of German dramatic poetry. If he should think fit to bring forward "As You Like It"—and those who value the theatre as a source of intellectual enjoyment in one of its highest forms earnestly hope that he will—he may confidently assume that more would be said and written about it in three months than in the three centuries or less that have elapsed since its first appearance. With the effects of the influence he has acquired by his genius and taste and enterprise we are not at present concerned. Bearing in mind the facts just stated, we propose simply to relate the history of "Macbeth," the tragedy with which the winter season at the Lyceum is to open. Indeed, this production will probably give rise to deeper discussion than any of its predecessors, inasmuch as Miss Ellen Terry will strike into a wholly new path by coming forward as Lady Macbeth, and as Mr. Irving, with his usual independence of thought, sets nearly all received ideas at defiance in his conception of the principal character.

"Macbeth" presumably owed its origin to the curiosity as to Scottish history and legend that was awakened in London by the prospective and actual accession of James I. to the throne. For some time before that event the story of the meeting on the blasted heath and its consequences had been well known. It had appeared in Bellenden's translation of Boece, Holinshed's Chronicles, and other important works. In 1596 a "Ballad of Macdobeth" was registered with the Stationers' Company, and Kemp's "Nine Days' Wonder," printed four years later, contains a lament that the author of such a "beastly ballets" as "A story of Macdobeth or Macsomewhat" might make "wenches prophetesses for little or no profit." When, in 1605, the King visited Oxford, he was "addressed on entering the city by three students of St. John's College, who alternately accosted His Majesty, reading some Latin verses founded on the prediction of the weird sisters relative to Banquo and Macbeth." "The conceit thereof," we are further told, "the King did very much applaude." It seems to have been about that time that Shakspere's tragedy was acted for the first time, Macbeth being performed by Burbage. Many allusions in the text are to incidents that occurred in 1604 or 1605, and a passage from a school play of 1607, "Instead of a jester, we'll have a ghost in a white sheet sit at the upper end of the table," may be accepted as a sign that the piece had been given to the public. Knight has shown some good reason for supposing that Shakspere visited Scotland with a section of the Lord Chamberlain's company of players in 1599, but if he then conceived the idea of writing "Macbeth" he did not embody it for four or five years, or, having embodied it at once, made several alterations in the verse as time went on. By 1610, at all events, the literature of the world had been permanently enriched by this tragedy, for which the poet is said to have received a letter of thanks from the Court, and in which, intentionally or unintentionally, he matched himself against the Greek dramatists, not without success, by dealing with the fulfilment of a destiny as unrelenting as that encountered by the house of Laius and Atreus.

It is almost needless to state that under the sway of the ideas imported into this country at the Restoration "Macbeth" did not escape insensate mutilation. Although, as we gather from Pepys, it was represented in its integrity down to 1667, an "improvement" upon it by Davenant, whose loudly professed reverence for Shakespere was simply of the lip, appeared at the Duke's Theatre in 1672 as a sort of opera. On being printed it was described as "The tragedy of Macbeth, with all the alterations, amendments, additions, and new songs." Nothing can be said in favour of this production except that it has more of Shakespere in it than Cibber's "Richard III.," Nahum Tate's "Lear," and other achievements of the kind. Davenant had no sense of the strength and beauty of his original. He wantonly tampered with hundreds of lines, inserted insipid dialogue of his own, left out such noble speeches as that beginning "My way of life," wrote up the parts of the Thane of Fife and Lady Macduff, merged Rosse and young Siward in Lennox, and caused the ghost of Duncan to haunt his virtual murderess. One of the most gratuitous of the changes is made in the first act, where Lady Macduff enters as the guest of Lady Macbeth. As an illustration of the style of the interpolations, we quote some lines addressed by the latter to the former :—

> "Madam, I have observ'd, since you came hither,
> You have been still disconsolate. Pray tell me,
> Are you in perfect health?"

Both the choruses and the names given to the weird sisters were taken from Middleton's "Witch," at that time, as for nearly a century afterwards, in manuscript only. More grateful to the ear than any of Davenant's verse was the music introduced in the piece. While out of place, it shows much of the characteristic vigour and melody of him who wrote it, Matthew Lock. Purcell, having left behind him a copy by himself of the score, is sometimes thought to have been the composer; but as in 1672 he was only fourteen years of age, and as his first recorded work bears date 1679, we can hardly fail to reject the claims put forward on his behalf to the honour. It remains to be said that the rarest histrionic talents of the period were employed in the representation. Macbeth was played by Betterton, Macduff by Harris, and Lady Macbeth by Mrs. Betterton. In one important respect, however, the performance is not pleasant to think of. Instead of being regarded as incarnations of Fate in its severest aspect, as "organs of the numbing spell," the weird sisters were cast to the low comedians of the company, who, dressed like our old friend Mother Bunch—that is, in tall conical hats, scarlet kirtles, and high-heeled shoes—sang, danced, grimaced, hopped to and fro over brooms, and generally resorted to more or less indecent farce. Betterton is supposed by all historians of the stage to have possessed fine taste and judgment, but it is difficult to credit him with either of these qualities in view of the fact that, while exercising paramount authority in the theatre, he preferred the altered "Macbeth" to the original, in which he had previously appeared, and sanctioned or tolerated the degradation of the witches to the level of comic old women. If he stooped for the sake of a commercial success it was not wholly in vain. Downes, to whose "Roscius Anglicanus" we owe so much of our information as to the English stage at this time, writes in his quaint way:—"The tragedy of 'Macbeth,' altered by Sir William Davenant, being dressed in all its finery, as new clothes, new scenery, machines as flying for the witches, with all the singing and dancing in it, the first composed by Mr. Lock, the other by Mr. Channell and Mr. Priest, it being all excellent, the performance being in the nature of an opera, it recompensed double the expenses; it proves still a lasting play." Lasting indeed. In course of time Davenant's "Macbeth" completely superseded Shakespere's even off the stage, Sir Richard Steele, among others, innocently quoting from the first under the impression that it was the second.

Nearly eighty years passed away before the wrong thus done to the great dramatist's memory was redressed. In 1737, it is true, the company at Covent Garden, with Quin at their head, announced the tragedy "as it was written by Shakespere;" but this appears to have been only a hollow pretence. Curiously enough, the honour of restoring the original text to the boards was reserved for the actor whose gratuitous alterations of "Hamlet" and "Romeo and Juliet" have exposed him to so many jeers and objurgations from students of dramatic poetry. Garrick accomplished this memorable feat at Drury Lane in 1744, previously taking care, by means of paragraphs in the newspapers, to ascertain that the step would be more acceptable than distasteful to the audience. "Why, what does he mean?"

asked Quin, as though to show that the announcement of 1737 was what we have termed it; "don't I act Macbeth as Shakespere wrote it?" Garrick's ardour in the cause of "ancient literature," however, did not prevent him from allowing the witches to remain comic (he ever stood in awe of the gallery), from giving increased effect to Lock's music, and also, it is painful to add, from tacking on a dying speech to his part. Of such speeches, it will be remembered, he was inordinately fond. He made the most of them; and Foote, in his lively "Tea," would ridicule this weakness by imitations in the following fashion of the great actor's last scene as Lothario:—

> . . . . . "Adorns my fall,
> And che-che-che-che-cheers my heart in dying."

Insincere and shallow as Garrick's acting usually was, he seems to have risen to greatness as Macbeth, throwing into the shade all impersonations of the character since Betterton. "In the scene after the murder," writes Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, "his acting could not be surpassed. Even the description causes a thrill. His distraction and agonising horrors were set off by his wife's calmness and confidence. The beginning of the scene was conducted in terrifying whispers. Their looks and actions supplied the place of words. The poet here gives only an outline to the consummate actor:—

> 'I have done the deed . . .
> Didst thou not hear a noise? . . .
> Did not you speak?'

The dark colouring given to these abrupt speeches makes the scene awful and tremendous to the auditors. The expression of despair and agony and horror as Garrick looked at his bloody hands was long remembered." Of his Lady Macbeths, there can be no doubt, Mrs. Pritchard was by far the most vigorous and impressive. In the banquet scene, Davies tells us, "her endeavours to engage the attention of the guests and to draw them from the observation of Macbeth equalled anything ever seen in the art of acting; and in the sleeping scene her acting resembled those sudden flashes of lightning which more accurately discover the horrors of surrounding darkness." Her "We fail," by the way, was a question put in a tone of mingled amazement and triumph. It is difficult now to think that the effect of Garrick's performance was not interfered with by the costumes he wore. At one time he would clothe Macbeth in a modern suit, with broad lace on his coat and waistcoat, and at another in what resembled the uniform of an English officer. In 1773, before Garrick left the stage, these anachronisms were opposed by Macklin, who, if not particularly successful as Macbeth, associated his name with the play by insisting, when it was given at Covent Garden, that the parts should be dressed in kilts and tartans. Garrick was annoyed to think that he had not done this himself, but he had at least the satisfaction of knowing that, thanks to his own penetration, the accents of Davenant's muse in "Macbeth" would never be heard on the stage again.

No account of the fortunes of the tragedy would be complete without a reference to Ducis' reconstruction of it at the Comédie Française in 1783. How far this version differed from the original an extract from "The French Stage in the Eighteenth Century" will show:—

"Ducis, as might have been foreseen from the fact that in adapting 'Hamlet' he left the Ghost to the imagination, did not venture to introduce the Weird Sisters. He feared that they would excite much less awe than derision among a French audience, serious as was the impression created by the supernatural element in 'Sémiramis' since spectators had been banished from the stage. On the other hand, he had to bear in mind that the essence of 'Macbeth' lay in a contest between destiny and freewill, and that it was expedient to give the first a palpable form. In this difficulty he decided to reduce the trio to one. Iphictyone, a Scandinavian sorceress, finds a temporary home among the Highland crags, where she influences the minds of men for evil. Even from the adapter's point of view we may doubt whether this was a change for the better, but it is at least grateful to find that at a time when English players persistently treated the witches as comic characters—dressing as Mother Hubbard, leaping over brooms of the traditional pattern, and generally descending to grotesque buffoonery—Iphictyone should have been made an engine of terror instead of laughter. In another respect, of course, the French system operated most injuriously on the play. Faithful to the time law, Ducis asked his audience, in effect, to believe that in the space of twenty-four hours Macbeth could yield to supernatural suggestion, wade through slaughter to a throne, experience the keenest pangs of remorse, seek relief in accomplishing fresh crimes, and withstand the siege that ends in his death. Nine out of every ten Parisians would have fiercely resented an infringement of the unities, but the improbability of the story in its present shape was sufficient to neutralize the effect of a comparatively unaltered Lady Macbeth—here named Frédégonde (Madame Vestris)—and of many passages echoing the weird grandeur of the original."

Whatever may be thought of the other principles of the classical school of tragedy, its rigid exclusion of the gay from the serious was attended here with an undeniable advantage.

Vita!

ONLY an hour—
One hour of rapture, 'neath the silver moon,
And we who met too late, in life's sweet June,
Now part too soon!

Only a day—
A day of memories, love could not save;
The end has come; God! take the life you gave,
I can be brave.

Only a year—
A year of anguish, you can never know,
Our joy had changed to sorrow, and to snow,
Ere harvest glow.

Only a life—
A life of sadness: 'tis love's destiny!
God took you to His heart, and let you die.
Why left am I?

MARGARET BRANDON.

The Headless Ghost.

"PICTURESQUE old house with a moat and drawbridge, and haunted! What more would you have?"

"What more? Much less would satisfy me, thank you," Mrs. Lyster, wife of the speaker, made answer. She was stout, practical, imaginative, and very much afraid of ghosts.

"I thought moats and drawbridges were found in poetry only," quoth Madge Lyster, daughter of the above.

"Not at all," her father replied. "My friend Shepstone has just bought a house with one and the other, and a ghost thrown in; not into the moat, but the bargain, in Brightshire. There is a haunted turret chamber, and we are all asked down for Christmas. It is sure to be pleasant down there."

"It depends upon who is in the house besides the ghost," Madge answered.

"Let me see. Shepstone mentioned some names," and the speaker, opening his pince-nez with his nose, proceeded to read aloud from the letter in his hand.

"The Hillsboroughs—the Toler girls—Claude Baldwin—the two Luxmores—Mrs. and Miss Oswald—Maurice Pemberton——"

"That will do," Madge interrupted. "When do we go?"

"The invitation is for a fortnight from the 21st."

"But is the house really haunted, John?" put in Mrs. Lyster plaintively. "I shall die if I see a ghost; I know I shall."

"My dear Maria, the only people who see ghosts are those who make up their minds to see them. Make up your mind not to see this special ghost, and you will be all right."

"I do not think I could keep my mind made up for a whole fortnight, John. It is too much to expect." Whereupon Mr Lyster laughed, for he was of quite the same opinion.

Mrs. Lyster never dreamt of resisting the wills of her husband and daughter, so, although it would have been more agreeable to her to spend her Christmas in her own comfortable house in town (it was modern, and had no room for a ghost), she allowed herself to be taken down to Brightshire on December 21st, 188—. It was a soft, damp day, with nothing harsh or wintry in the atmosphere, and the furs in which the ladies wrapped themselves, for their four-mile drive from the station, were almost superfluous.

The mystery of the growing dusk enveloped the picturesque old house as the carriage rolled, with a hollow sound, over the drawbridge, now never raised, and drew up before the ancient porch.

"This is lovely," said Madge.

"Good gracious!" cried her mother. "I am sure there are ghosts about! I smell them!"

"I think it is nothing worse than tobacco," said Madge, as she sniffed the air; and, out of the twilight, three men emerged suddenly, and three cigarette ends were thrown away.

"Welcome all of you!" cried the cheery voice of Alex Shepstone, the host. "I think you know Claude Baldwin and Pemberton."

"My wife thought you were the ghost," said Lyster. "I hope you have not laid him."

* * * *

That evening, in the old hall, as the young people sat round the wood fire, Madge insisted upon having the ghost trotted out, or rather his history. "Who is it, and what is it like?" she said. "Which is the turret chamber, and does it stay there, or wander about the house?"

"The turret chamber," said Maude Shepstone, "is naturally in the turret. We all declare that we do not believe in the ghost, but we never go into his room."

"Then it is a he ghost," said Pemberton. "My interest at once dies out."

"The turret chamber," Maude went on, "is apparently at the end of a long corridor on the second floor, upon which the principal bedrooms open. But at the end of this corridor there is a door leading to the back staircase; and before you reach this door there is a turn to the right into a narrow passage; at the end of this passage, on the left, there is a short flight of steps which lead directly into the turret chamber. The door of the room is at the top of the stairs."

"And in the room, chained to the wall——"

"Nothing of the kind, Mr. Pemberton. I should like to make you sleep in the room to put an end to your incredulity."

"I prefer my incredulity to your remedy, thank you."

"But is it empty or furnished?" Madge asked.

"There is a bed in the corner facing the door; a piece of shabby carpet on the floor, and one chair."

"I suppose a ghost does not want much furniture; but were I a ghost, I should choose a more comfortable room."

"It had no choice," replied Maude. "In that room, and on that bed, there was a murder committed, exactly one hundred years ago this Christmas."

"I say, Miss Shepstone," cried the young men, "draw it mild! We are all as pale as paper."

"A young man was found dead on the bed, with his head on the floor beside him; and, when the ghost appears on the anniversary of the murder, its head is always——"

"Don't, Maude!" cried Miss Lyster, with her fingers in her ears. "I can bear everything but the head!"

"I should make the police interfere, and have the head fastened on," put in Pemberton; and as he was speaking Maude jumped up, crying out "Good gracious! What is that?"

A wild and wailing cry was distinctly heard; an unearthly cry if ever there was one! The girls turned as white as their gowns, and the young men looked solemn. Again the cry rose on the still night air, and Maude Shepstone, clutching Mr. Pemberton's arm, pointed in the direction of the grand staircase, which rose from the far end of the hall in one broad flight, and, on the first landing, divided to right and left.

As the eyes of the bewildered group were directed towards it, they saw a white figure gliding rapidly down. On the lower step it seemed to hesitate for a moment; then it suddenly disappeared.

"Is that the gentleman from the turret chamber?" whispered Claude Baldwin with a weak attempt at jocularity. "By Jove! There is the cry again."

The drawing-room opened at that moment, and Mrs. Shepstone and a bright stream of light came out together.

"How dark you are here," she said. There was no light except from the fire. "Will someone be good enough to open the hall-door and let my little Fluffy in? The poor little fellow is crying out there in the cold."

Pemberton made for the door, and in trotted an injured looking little Skye terrier, the beloved of his mistress. She took him in her arms, and, carrying him up the hall towards the staircase, called aloud "Treddles."

"There goes the ghost," said Pemberton a few minutes later, "carrying the dog."

"Good gracious," cried Maude. "How deceptive this firelight is. That is mamma's maid Treddles, and she came to look for Fluffy."

"If all your ghosts are as easily explained away as the first that appeared, Maude," said Miss Lyster, "the house will lose its reputation."

"Oh, do not fear! The 31st has to come yet," was the reply. Then the fire was built up and everyone felt more comfortable.

But, in spite of their flippant tone, both Madge and Maude owned to a creepy sensation when the turret chamber was mentioned. The story of the murder could not be explained away. It had taken place without any doubt; and old people in the village remembered to have heard the story of the finding of the headless body, and the bodiless head, from a father, mother, aunt or uncle, who had been in service at the house at the time. But no one could be found who had actually seen the ghost. Everyone had heard of it, but no one had seen it, for the best reason in the world, that no one ever spent the night of December the 31st, the anniversary of the murder, in the turret chamber. It was obvious that if anyone had been in the room the ghost would have been seen. The absence of witnesses by no means proved the absence of the ghost. On the contrary, as no one could say it was not there, it may naturally be inferred that it was.

It was the last night of the old year. A bright and most beautiful night, with the crispness of slight frost in the air. The moon, whose beauties have been so often said and sung by poets and prosers that no epithets of praise are left for my humble pen, literally bathed the old house in her exquisite silvery light; and life seemed actually standing still in that remote country region, everything was so still and silent. In one room only a light burned, and in that room Madge Lyster and Maude Shepstone sat waiting, like two conspirators, for the clock on the chimney-piece to strike two.

During the last quarter of an hour they had hardly exchanged a word; and even Madge, the bolder spirit, felt less courageous than she had done an hour before.

"Are you afraid, Madge?" Miss Shepstone asked in a low voice, as the hand pointed to five minutes of the hour. "Shall we give it up?"

"Certainly not." The answer was to both questions. "I am determined to put an end to this silly nonsense! People will believe us when we say we have been in the turret chamber at the fatal hour, and have seen nothing. But I wish your ghost kept earlier hours."

"But suppose we see——"

"There is not the slightest chance of our seeing anything. The clock is striking; we may go. Step very softly; I do not want to be heard."

The girls rose with a certain solemnity of mien, and left the room together. They wore long dressing-gowns of white flannel; their hair fell over their shoulders, and they looked extremely picturesque and pretty. Madge led the way; but, in spite of her air of courage and her bold words, she was quivering with nervousness when she found herself, with Miss Shepstone behind her, in the dim corridor, lighted only by the moon.

"It looks much longer than it does by daylight," Maude whispered. Her face was as white as her dressing-gown; and her teeth would have chattered if she had not kept her mouth open.

"It is only because we are walking so slowly," Madge answered.

"What is that?" And Maude made a grab at her friend's arm.

"Don't, Maude! It's only someone snoring! That was a man's room we passed."

"Yes. Maurice Pemberton's; I know his boots."

"He might live in one of them if he were hard up for a house; they are so big!" Madge whispered back. "I say, Maude, you are frightened! I can hear your heart thumping."

"Is it any wonder? Suppose we see the ghost! If he had his head properly screwed on, I should not mind half as much."

"We shan't see him, so it does not matter about his head. Now for it. This is the turn. Steady! Make no sound. The door of the room is shut, or we should see the moonlight streaming out. Good gracious! It will want some courage to open it."

"Oh, let us turn back!" cried Maude. "I am sure it is there?"

But Madge went steadily on, and in another moment she and her friend had mounted the short flight of steps and halted before the door of the haunted room. It was ajar about an inch, and very, very slowly Madge pushed it wide. The moonlight poured through the undraped window, and shone full upon the two girls in their flowing gowns of white. It lighted their pale faces with an unearthly radiance, and from the moment the room was open before them, they stood motionless as statues.

Movement and speech were alike impossible. They were struck into rigid silence with terror and amazement, for on the low truckle bed was plainly to be seen the awful form of the headless ghost. There could be no mistake. It was headless; for, on the floor, in deep shadow, lay the head. They saw the ghastly thing but too plainly. The staring sightless eyeballs—the gaping mouth! Had there been any, even the very smallest, doubt upon the subject, how gladly would the terrified girls have seized upon it!

How long they stood there they do not know. How they got back along the corridor, and past Pemberton's hygienic boots, is a mystery they are unable to solve to this day. Maude declared that the ghost moved, and that a ghastly sound between a cry and a moan came from the head on the floor. Madge was positive that a head so situated could not utter a sound; and that if it, and the body it ought to have been on, had not been silent and motionless, she must have shrieked and fainted. As she kept her senses she knows the ghost was silent and quiet as befitted a phantom without a head.

It was perhaps just as well that the girls were in possession of a point of dispute. It kept them from dwelling upon the ghost itself, for when they did think of it they seemed to see the dreadful thing again. When, at last, they stopped arguing they found they were so nervous they could not spend the rest of the night apart, and the cold, frosty dawn of New Year's Day was breaking when Madge Lyster, at length, crept away to her own room.

But before they parted the girls entered into a solemn compact not to breathe a word of their terrible adventure to anyone.

"We have proved the truth of the story for ourselves, and that is enough," they said.

But Maurice Pemberton, who little knew how severely his boots had been spoken of in the middle of the night, remarked that Madge, the lively saucy Madge, looked pale; and she felt herself growing paler still when he said, "One would think you had seen the headless ghost last night, Miss Lyster."

But it is not easy to be nervous in broad daylight, and in the midst of pleasant companions; so, by lunch time, Madge was almost herself again, and Maude had all but persuaded herself that she had not heard a moan from that awful head.

Preparations had been going on for several days for the annual festivities of New Year's night; and all the guests, young and old, were in the hall after luncheon, renewing and rearranging the decorations, when Mrs. Shepstone appeared with an anxious face and perturbed mien. Something serious had happened without doubt.

"Listen, all of you," she said. "I am very sorry to spoil your pleasure, but we cannot have our party to-night. Every servant, indoor and out, has given me warning, and they refuse to spend even one more night in the house! They forfeit their wages, and leave in a body an hour hence. The cook has kindly dressed a dinner, but you must eat it cold."

"But why? What is the matter?" cried every one in a breath.

Mrs. Shepstone laughed. "Last night was the 31st of December, and, for the first time, the celebrated ghost was seen in the turret room."

"You don't say so! By whom?" Again everyone spoke except Madge and Maude, who got side by side and clasped hands.

"By one of the stablemen."

"Oh!" There was a distinct note of disappointment in that universal "Oh!"

"But why should a stableman not see it if it is to be seen?" demanded Mrs. Shepstone sarcastically. "What difference does it make?"

"But was it headless? That is the point," said Pemberton, and Madge and Maude exchanged glances. Right well they knew it was headless, for they had seen the head upon the floor.

"Have the man in and question him yourselves," said Mrs. Shepstone. She rang the bell and ordered Jem Baker to be sent in.

And Jem Baker came in presently, looking as if he had seen, not one ghost, but a dozen; and as if he could do without seeing another for some time to come.

"Now, Jem," said Pemberton, who had appointed himself chairman of the meeting, "speak up, and don't be afraid. You say you saw the ghost last night. What was it doing?"

Jem smiled faintly. "I didn't know as ghostes was expected to do anythink, sir."

"Nor more do I. Had the ghost its head on?"

"Yes, please, sir."

"You are sure?"

Jem grinned and touched his forehead. "Yes, please, sir."

"And now, Jem, tell me exactly where the ghost was when you saw it?"

Jem cleared his throat, and touched his forehead again. "If you please, sir, you know as how it's said that the turret room be haunted; so I thinks to myself, I don't believe this 'ere nonsense about ghostes, and I says to myself, I says, I'll jist look out for that there chap on the 31st. So when all was quiet like in the house, about one o'clock, I comes up the back stairs to the turret room, and I lays down on the bed, and I says to myself, if you come now, my fine feller, you and me 'll have a tussle for the best place. The moon was shining in as bright as anythink, and I warn't a bit frightened, for passon at home he used to say as how there was no such think as ghostes. I heard the stable clock strike two, and I were jist falling into a doze like, when the door flew open and there it war! I thought first there were a pair on 'em, all dressed in white, but my heart jumped into my mouth, and I popped my head down under my arm, and there I lay like a log; but I know I gave a sort of a moan, for I didn't rightly feel sure it wouldn't kill me for taking its bed. But it didn't do nothink; for, in a quarter of an hour, when I ventured to look again, it war gone, but the door were open wide."

By the time Jem had finished his story, Madge Lyster, in fits of laughter, was on one side of him, and Maude Shepstone on the other. "Was it you, Jem, really?" Madge cried. "Why, you foolish man, it was us you saw at the door and no ghost! We went to the turret room at two o'clock, and we saw you, and your head was on the floor! And we took you for the ghost! How do you account for your head being on the floor?"

"It warn't, miss. It warn't indeed."

"Oh, but it was. We could not be mistaken. Could we, Maude?"

"Please, miss," and Jem grinned broadly, "I know it warn't my head. It must have been my cap. I threw it on the floor when I laid down."

The girls looked at one another, and Madge broke into a hearty laugh. "Well," she said, "this is really too good a joke! And I was so certain I had seen the headless ghost."

Jem departed to spread the tale. The servants very kindly deigned to accept the explanation, and remained at their posts, and the New Year's party came off after all.

who shall undertake to kill it? Embalmed in print, mobilitate viget viresque acquirit eundo. Whence these tears? Alas! I have just been reading a brief biography of Molière from the pen of his profound admirer, Balzac; and I find that even that great apostle of truth in Art repeats the time-honoured but most untruthful anecdote of Molière's widow having been obliged to bribe the Paris mob to allow her husband's remains to be carried to the grave in peace.

The passage in which the error occurs is worth transcribing, were it only for the sake of its satirical hit at the eminent dignitary of the Church who pandered to the vulgar prejudices of the period by pretending to think that consecrated earth would be contaminated by the ashes of the illustrious dramatist and actor. "Monseigneur Harlay de Champvallon, Archbishop of Paris," writes Balzac, "notorious in that age for his amorous intrigues, refused the rites of sepulture to Molière. It was only by the express orders of the King that six feet of hallowed ground could be procured for the mortal remains of the great man. The Archbishop, compelled to obey the Royal command, sanctioned his interment in the churchyard of St. Joseph, Rue Montmartre. A couple of priests were sent to conduct the body to the grave, and a hundred persons, with wax-tapers in their hands, prepared to accompany the funeral procession. Meanwhile, the populace, knowing nothing of Molière but that he was an actor—utterly ignorant that he was also an illustrious dramatist and a man of solid worth—besieged the door of his house, yelling out threats and insults. His widow pacified their clamours by flinging them money out of a window; whereupon these insensate wretches, who would have dared to disturb the funeral of the illustrious dead, changed their tone and followed him in respectful silence to the tomb."

These words were written in 1826; Balzac died in 1850; and he cannot reasonably be blamed for not foreseeing what was to happen ten years after his death. Fortunately, however, for the reputation of the Paris mob—which is black enough already without any further coating of fancy paint—in the year 1860 an industrious antiquary, named Fillon, unearthed and published a contemporary letter, containing a full and detailed description of Molèire's funeral, by an eyewitness of the ceremony. From this letter it plainly appears that Molière's widow threw not a farthing out of the window; but that a certain sum of money was distributed, in a perfectly quiet and orderly manner, to the poor assembled at the grave, in strict accordance with a custom prevalent at French funerals time out of mind.

PHILIP KENT, B.A.

The Lucky Sixpence.

A STORY OF A CHILD.

POEM FOR RECITATION.

FAST through the crowded streets she pressed, a little London child,— Men, as they passed her, hustled her, and marvelled that she smiled!
So wan, so thin, so pinched that face, a smile seemed stranger there;
Yet, beaming, on she went, and made a sunshine in the air.
Through fog and gloom, through sleet and mud, sped on the little feet—
Sped through the City, down the Strand, and on to Regent Street.
Her scanty, fluttering petticoat scarce clothed the tiny form,
But still the child seemed unaware of wind, or snow, or storm.
What recked she of the hustling crowd, the long and bitter way,
When, in the close-shut infant hand, a lucky sixpence lay?
But, smiling 'neath her conscious brow, shone two brave childish eyes,
And steadily the little feet led on—to Paradise!
A sixpence there for her to spend—a world before to choose!
What pains too great for such a quest?—what judgment she must use!
And up and down the waggons toiled with many a luxury piled,
But none bore such an argosy as that small London child.
At toys, at cakes, she shook her head—they were for every day;

Some time, when she'd a penny, p'r'aps she'd come again that way;
But with a bright new sixpence these were poor things to buy;
So, from the shops that she disdained, she hastened hopefully!
Still further west, and further still;—when, with a joyful start,—
A thousand happy memories come thronging to her heart,—
She paused before a mansion where the door was opened wide,
And, gaily dressed, the children moved to and fro inside.
The lights were glancing brightly on each little golden head;
On the glossy leaves and flowers a sunny glint was shed;
And the child, with eager, catching breath, looked wonderingly within,
Thinking of stories she had heard of a Home that she might win,—
Of the dwellings where the children lived happy all day long,
Serving God, their loving Father, with anthem and with song.
So with courage newly born, conquering every rising fear,
She put anxiously the question, "If you please, does God live here?"
With a stare of stern surprise they said, flinging the hall-door to,
"This is a place for ladies—not for the likes of you!"
She shrank into the darkness, with an infinite dismay,
And, trembling, sought once more the road that led the city way.
She struggled on, in spite of cold, in spite of hunger's pain;
Though night was spreading o'er the streets, her search began again:
She longed to find that happy home, and pondered more and more—
"Will God, too, open to the rich, and not unto the poor?
Then, when I reach His happy home, lest He should think me poor,
I'll give Him my new sixpence, and He'll open wide the door!"
Past glittering shop-windows, where gas was gleaming bright
On toys, and sweets, and everything to please the childish sight;
Yet all that they can show there, not the slightest longing stirs,
Since for sixpence, homeless infant! a happy home is hers!
So she kept her coin, quite safely, in the icy little hand;
Faint, yet eager; cold, yet ardent; she went feebly up the Strand;
When a gaily-lighted building, with a row of cabs before,

Drew the tiny, trembling figure till it stood beside the door.
What a vision of enchantment faced the weary, brave, blue eyes,
As they gazed in solemn gladness at this wonderful surprise!
What marvellous thick carpet, where the footfall's never heard—
What forms of marble beauty that childish spirit stirred!
What a glorious, kingly chamber, bathed in sumptuous, brilliant glow,
Through which floated, like an echo, strains of music, sweet and low!
And those softly-falling curtains! what beyond them might not lie,
If only she might venture with her hand to put them by!
Oh! the rapture of that moment! she could have stood for years
With that brilliant glow upon her, and the music in her ears:
But, peering in beside her, a boy had drawn so near,
That to him she gently whispered, "If you please, does God live here?"
Half heeding, wholly laughing at the question murmured so,
"Well, whoever does, he's lucky! That's gospel, don't you know?"
The child drew back, sore grieving, in the dismal, yellow glare,
For the curtains now had parted, and down the crimson stair
Came a train of English beauty to the carriages without,
While the road seemed all alive as the hansoms dashed about.
The child, bewildered, dizzy, turned to cross the busy street,—
A cry—a shout—"What is it?" and a rush of hurrying feet!
And the ladies, with pale faces, and the men, with hasty frown,
Asked quickly, "What's the matter?" "Only a child knocked down!"

* * * *

How serene and still the ward is on this chilly winter's eve!
A child who lies too silent there can scarcely yet believe
This is not all a portion of that restless dream of pain,
And wearily goes over all that weary time again.
Once more she sees the children through the widely-opened door,
And knows it opens to the rich, and not unto the poor;
Once more she looks intently on that Vision of the Night,

On that strange, enchanted chamber, bathed in radiant crimson light!
Then there comes a wild confusion of glancing lamps, of tears,
Of the sound of trampling horses, of cries, of childish fears;
Of a desperate, trembling rush, just before the lights went out,
And an echo, ere the silence, of a many-throated shout;
Then a time of throbbing terror, of agony supreme,
And a sudden, bright awakening;—was all of it—a dream?
What a soft, soft bed to lie on, now that all the pain had past;
No! no! it was not all a dream! This was God's home at last!
Then a gentle woman bent, and brought her loving face quite near,
Yet could scarcely catch the whisper, "If you please, does God live here?"
And the infant held her breath, scarce knowing what might come—
Stern answer? brutal jeering? and another search for home?
With an infinite compassion she took the tiny hand,
And showed how, through the casement, night was settling o'er the land:—
"But beyond the fleecy clouds, and beyond the star-lit sky, Lies the home of God, my darling, open everlastingly!"
"It is too far away, then; I can never get up there!
If God wished to have the children, He would surely build a stair?"
"No need of that, my darling, for many and many a day God comes here for His children, and carries them away."
Oh! the weary eyes beamed brightly at the fading of her fear!
"Do you think He'll come to-morrow? do you think He knows I'm here?"
Poor little lonely infant! God was indeed so near!
"Yes, I think He'll come to-morrow; I am sure He knows you're here."
"Then, my sixpence! Oh, my sixpence!" She gave such a cry of grief,
Till the nurse, with soothing words, came once more to her relief.
They had found it, tightly clasped within the little icy hand,
When they picked her up, unconscious, on the roadway in the Strand.

She wrapped it close in paper, nor would be happy till
They promised her to place it there upon the window-sill:
"When God comes, in the morning, He will find it ready so;
He would leave me," said the child, "if He thought me poor, you know!
But I'll give Him my bright sixpence, and He'll see I am not poor!
He will carry me away with Him, and open wide the door!"
So they smoothed the little pillow for the weary little head,
And silently they watched around the infant's little bed.
And early in the morning God opened wide the door,
And gave the happy London waif a home for evermore!

A Glance at the Galleries.

THE small winter exhibitions come as a pleasant relief after the surfeit of the Academy, and though, perhaps, such ambitious works are not to be found, yet there are consequently fewer absolutely bad ones, and the good are easily discovered—an immense advantage.

The Exhibition at the Institute of Painters in Oil-Colours is fully up to the average of former years, and though one is chiefly struck by the preponderance of small pictures and the absence of any striking originality, yet there are many little works apt to be overlooked, but which will well repay careful study. "The Château of Concy," by W. Bright Morris, is a gem in its delicate feeling and poetic mystery, while "An Old Anchor," with the Madonna-like mother and child standing by the side, gazing out to sea, is solemn and suggestive. In quite a different treatment, but excellent in its manner, is "On the Cornish Towans," by Adrian Stokes, a striking bit of realism, with the children and sheep in blazing sunshine on the sandhills by the sea. Fantin Latour's rendering of the "Scene finale du Rheingold" is full of dreamy poetry, and "Andante," a small work by Bernard Hall, representing a sleeping wood-nymph, is worthy of a much better position, both for its good painting of the figure and its harmonious background; the pose, however, might be happier. It is some time since Fred Morgan has been seen to such advantage as in his "Tired Gleaners;" the faces of the children in half light are admirably treated and well drawn in every way. Miss Maude Goodman's pictures of children are always welcome, and "Then the Fairies went to Bed" has all her characteristic grace and refinement. One of the best pictures in the gallery is Burton Barber's "Blonde and Brunette," the painting of the golden-haired child and pug dog being remarkably good, and the expressions admirable. An equally good work in another room is "I Won't Apologize," by Alfred W. Strutt, which, in knowledge of painting, technical skill, and sense of humour, brings this young artist at once to the fore. Messrs. Keeley Halswelle, Edwin Hayes, Ernest Parton, Daniel Murray, and other well-known members send good contributions.

Messrs. Arthur Tooth and Sons have got together a collection of pictures at their gallery in the Haymarket which fully sustains their reputation, and, though the number of foreign works is unnecessarily heavy, there are some excellent English examples. Peter Graham, R.A., is, par excellence, the painter of Scotch cattle, and "Rising Mists," with the bullocks in the marshy glen and the storm effect behind, is very powerful. "The Fisherman's Wife," by D. A. C. Artz, is beautiful in its pose and colour; but far better examples of Josef Israel's have been seen than "A Gleaner of the Shore," which is painty in the extreme. G. Jacquet sends two cleverly painted heads, while "La Jeune Favorite," by L. Deutsch, and "Le Pardon-Bretagne," by Dagnan-Bouveret, share together high praise. Additional interest is given to the gallery by the presence of two works by the late Frank Holl, R.A., and the smaller one, "Watching," which represents a woman and child on the sea-shore, looking sadly out into the distance, is a poem on canvas. Ernest Crofts and H. W. B. Davis are well represented in their different styles, while C. Meissonier, fils, exhibits an admirable picture, entitled "The Improvisatore." Even so short a notice would be incomplete without drawing attention to "Minding the Flock," by Pierre Billet; a simple peasant girl in blue blouse surrounded by her sheep, but admirably painted and full of suggestive beauty.

Mr. Thomas McLean's Gallery, next door, is well worth a visit, for the pictures are few and good. J. B. Burgess, A.R.A., gives us capital colour and life in his picture of the "Cigar Manufactory, Seville," and "In Love," by Julius Zuber, representing two men in a cottage, bantering a young girl who is lost in her thoughts, is remarkable for its realism and forcible depth of tone. "Not worth Mending," by Oreste de Molin, is a humorous subject well executed, and the expression on the tinker's face, as he looks at the laughing girls, is very good. E. Van Marcke's "Dutch Pasture Land" is powerfully painted, and the tone of the foreground and the fine handling of the sky show the painter's mastery of his subject. The place of honour is naturally given to Rosa Bonheur's "Pasturage in the Pyrenees," a very fine work, though we have seen better painting of distance by this artist. James Hardy, Edwin Ellis, and E. E. Warren have good works, and Vicat Cole, R.A., is represented by a beautiful little painting of "The Thames at Streatley."

The Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, will not set the Thames on fire, but Mr. Walter Severn, the President, has managed to secure amongst many that are "but indifferent honest," several very pleasing little exhibits, and a few that are really good. Miss Fanny Moody is to be congratulated on the excellence of her work and on her steady advance: "Dogs of the Day" shows knowledge of the subject and technical skill which deserve high praise. "A Midsummer Evening," by A. Helcké, a delicate landscape suffused with the warm tones of sunset, lingers pleasantly in one's memory, together with "Evening at Penkridge," by V. De Ville. The Hon. Stephen Coleridge contributes some very careful work, and John Varley and James Webb lend good support to a little exhibition which is worth a visit.

Mr. Mendoza's Gallery in King Street, St. James's, shows a tasteful collection of drawings in black and white, some of which are remarkable for their excellence both in design and finish. Considerable colour and effect can be obtained from black and white skilfully handled, as C. Whymper's "Grouse Driving on a Yorkshire Moor" shows, a drawing that proves great ability and appreciation of sport. R. F. Hensman's "Alone" is a clever sketch of a girl on a sofa, and "A Berkshire Lane," by C. J. Lewis, is full of the poetic feeling of twilight, admirably treated. Miss J. B. Folkard's portrait of "Kitty" is perhaps the gem of the collection—the beauty of the face, the simplicity of the treatment, and the texture of the hair especially commend it. James Hayllar contributes some clever heads; Clough Bromley is represented by a beautiful etching of Sonning, while Mrs. Topling, William Strutt, and Davidson Knowles also aid the collection.

H. L. COLLINSON.

Rafael Calvo.

PERHAPS one of the strangest scenes ever enacted in a theatre took place at the Teatro Principio in Cadiz on October 7.

The auditorium was crowded from floor to ceiling, but, in lieu of the expectant faces and merry voices of an ordinary theatre crowd, no noise was heard, a look of sorrow was everywhere discernible, and each member of the audience was clothed in deepest mourning.

The orchestra played a solemn funeral march, and the curtain was slowly raised, displaying an empty stage, save for a high pedestal placed in the centre. On the pedestal, hung round with crape, was a large photograph of a man, and flowers lay in abundance round the pillar.

Simultaneously the audience fell reverently on their knees, and for several moments no sound was heard except a half stifled sob or a deep sigh.

Then came forward upon the stage Señor Viesca, one famous in the Spanish world of letters, and standing by the pedestal he gave a discourse on the man whose likeness was before them; he told them of Rafael Calvo, his life, his genius, his virtues, of how his honest work and sincere love of his art had placed him at the very top of the Spanish dramatic profession, when death, as if jealous of his success, had seized him in the midst of his triumphs and the prime of his manhood.

When Señor Viesca had finished speaking several poems were recited, then with reverent hands a large wreath of laurel was placed around the actor's portrait, and, to the music of a solemn dirge, the audience slowly and sorrowfully left the theatre, which only a few nights before had been rendered bright and joyous by the genius and talent of Rafael Calvo.

The audience on this solemn occasion was no ordinary one; it was composed of all the eminent men and women in the dramatic and literary circles of Spain, who had gathered together to celebrate a vigil in memory of their famous and well-beloved comrade, whose death left a place in their ranks not soon to be filled.

Rafael Calvo was born in Seville on March 19, 1842. The stage had been his profession from his earliest youth; he was universally admired by the public, and beloved by his brother and sister artists.

While staying in Cadiz to fulfil a professional engagement, he fell a victim to that dread disease smallpox, to which he succumbed after three days' illness.

To show the extreme veneration in which he was held, the corporation of Cadiz organised the solemn midnight service in the theatre that has so often rung with praise of him "whose talents have contributed so largely and gloriously to the advancement of modern dramatic art on the Spanish stage."

"DREAM FACES."

A new and Original Play, in one act, by WYNN MILLER.

Produced, under the direction of Mr. CHARLES CARTWRIGHT, at Terry's Theatre, Thursday afternoon, November 1st, 1888.

Robert	Mr. BRANDON THOMAS.	Lucy	Miss ELLALINE TERRISS.
Philip Lumley ..	Mr. PERCY LYNDAL.	Helen (a Servant) ..	Miss WOOD.
Aunt Margaret	Miss CARLOTTA ADDISON.

This excellent little play (given for copyright purposes, at Sanger's Amphitheatre, Ramsgate, October 18) should, now that it has been introduced to the London public, promptly find its way into some regular bill. It is a simple, but touching and impressive story. We have a pair of youthful sweethearts—Philip all love and honour; Lucy all tenderness and innocence. They both dote on Aunt Margaret, and wonder why she has never married—this true-hearted woman so fit to make a good wife. Philip soon learns the truth, when asking for Lucy's hand. Years ago Aunt Margaret was to have married Lucy's father, her cousin Robert. He not only jilted her, but the scoundrel married another, deserted his wife and child, and went to the bad altogether, being convicted and sentenced for forgery. Margaret, hearing his wife was dying, had befriended her to the last, and brought up Lucy as her niece, giving her all the true love she once had wasted on her father. Will Philip still marry Lucy, knowing who she is, and that her father is alive, though the child has been taught to think him dead? The young man does not hesitate, his love is too deep to be changed by this revelation. What Margaret has not said is that since Robert came out of prison she has generously helped him over and over again with large sums of money, in the hopes of keeping him straight. And now he comes to her unexpectedly to demand assistance from her. This time she refuses, and this wretch, accidentally hearing that Lucy is his daughter, threatens to take her away from Margaret if she does not give him the money. In vain appealing to his better feelings, she consents to anything sooner than the child should be torn from her. Robert insists on seeing his daughter, and she allows him to do so if he will pass himself off for a friend of Lucy's dead father. Alone and face to face with this sweet young girl, so like his dead wife, Robert is strangely moved. She tells him how she pictures her father, from what Aunt Margaret has told her; a man the soul of honour, brave in danger, loyal in friendship, true and tender to women. From her he hears that the two hundred a year left him by his father, as he thought, has been the gift of Margaret. Overwhelmed by the evidence of the noble nature of the woman he has so wronged, Robert for the first time sees himself in his true light. Repentant and bowed down with shame, he kisses Lucy once, and, giving her back to Margaret with a promise that he will lead a better life, he leaves them for ever, just as he has found out that Margaret has never ceased to love him; that his daughter cherishes his name; and that all the happiness that might have been his he has lost by sin. This play is as well written as it is interesting and healthy in sentiment. Mr. Percy Lyndal was very good and earnest. Miss Ellaline Terriss, a sweet and pretty Lucy, only lacked the depth of feeling to be acquired by experience. Miss Carlotta Addison has never shown to greater advantage than as Margaret; her heartbreaking sobs when she begs for the child not to be taken from her, and all the scene, were admirably dramatic and true to nature. The most difficult part was allotted to Mr. Brandon Thomas, who during the first part of the piece, through nervousness, did not do himself justice, but he soon pulled himself together, and his acting in the interview with his daughter, and the subsequent scene with Margaret, were simply magnificent, showing a depth of feeling and power that moved everyone to tears.

At the same matinée was produced under the direction of Mr. William Terriss, a three-act Farcical Rally, by Walter Helmore and Eden Phillpotts, entitled,

"THE POLICEMAN."

Cuthbert Ferguson	Mr. Forbes Dawson.	Servant	Mr. Halley.
Randolph Ferguson	Mr. Benjamin Webster.	Inspector	Mr. Vandenhoff.
Old Blunderley ..	Mr. S. Whitaker.	Lady Gasse	Miss Haydon.
Simpson Blunderley	Mr. Compton Coutts.	Ethel	Miss May Whitty.
Captain Wellington Hill	Mr. H. Morell.	Mrs. Cuthbert Ferguson ..	Miss Gabrielle Goldney.
Holmes	Mr. Courtneidge.	Parker..	Miss Lillian Millward.

Alfred Watling (551 B Metropolitan Police) .. .. Mr. Arthur Williams.

This Rally (why "rally"?) was first produced at the Lyric Hall, Ealing, January 12, 1887. Its reproduction at Terry's is worthy of record for the excellent acting of Mr. Arthur Williams as a quaint, half-stupid, but money-grasping policeman, who is made to masquerade as a millionaire in evening dress; and that of Mr. Forbes Dawson, as one of those well-known daring, impudent farcical gentlemen who scheme to get other people into scrapes and burn their own fingers. Both these gentlemen were remarkably good, and Miss Lillian Millward deserves praise for her amusing rendering of a bad part. But "The Policeman" as a play, despite some clever scenes, is too thin for three acts, and treads too well-worn paths to prove of any lasting interest. After so artistic and delicate a page as "Dream Faces" it appeared all the more commonplace.

"FAUST UP TO DATE."

A Burlesque in two acts by GEORGE SIMS and HENRY PETTITT. Music by MEYER LUTZ.
First produced [by CHARLES HARRIS] at the Gaiety Theatre, Tuesday, October 30, 1888.

Mephistopheles	Mr. E. J. LONNEN.	Elsa	Miss LILLIAN PRICE.
Valentine	Mr. GEORGE STONE.	Lisa	Miss FLORENCE LEVEY.
Old Faust	Mr. HARRY PARKER.	Katrina	Miss GREVILLE.
Lord Chancellor	Mr. WALTER LONNEN.	Hilda	Miss SPRAGUE.
Faust	Miss FANNY ROBINA.	Totchen	Miss MABEL LOVE.
Siebel	Miss JENNY MCNULTY.	Martha	Miss MARIA JONES.
Wagner	Miss EMMA BROUGHTON.	Waitresses	Miss EMILY ROBINA. Miss MINNIE ROSS.
Donner	Miss ALICE YOUNG.	Marguerite	Miss FLORENCE ST. JOHN.
Blitzen	Miss HETTY HAMER.

It might have been thought that Goethe's legend was too hackneyed a subject to afford scope for a new version; but Messrs. Sims and Pettitt have contrived to introduce into it fresh elements of fun, without so far departing from the original story as to make it unrecognisable. We have Old Faust longing for youth and love, and the appearance of Mephistopheles, who summons a vision of Marguerite, engaged as a fascinating barmaid at the Italian Exhibition at Nuremberg. Old Faust signs the necessary bond and is transformed into a gay and handsome gallant, who is accepted by Marguerite. Her brother Valentine, to favour the addresses of Siebel, makes his sister a ward in Chancery, and the married pair dread the punishment of the Lord High Chancellor, from which punishment they eventually escape at the Olympic Gardens, Nuremberg, by ascending in a balloon. Mephistopheles is outwitted by the reappearance of Old Faust, with the grievance that the gentleman in red has not fulfilled his portion of the contract, but allowed another to enjoy himself in his place. Valentine, though he has been carried off as killed, comes to life again, his valuable existence having been saved by Faust's sword being turned aside by Valentine's Waterbury watch, the touching gift of his sister!

MISS FLORENCE ST. JOHN AND MISS FANNY ROBINA.

MR. GEORGE STONE.

MISS LILLIAN PRICE.

The music, written by Herr Lutz, is appropriate and tuneful, and the book very amusing. The authors have been guilty of some atrocious puns, as may be gathered from the following:—

> "These sapphires are the finest I have seen;
> Ah! what I've sapphired for you, my queen.
> An opal ring, they say, bad luck will be,
> This one I opal not do that for me.
> I plunged, and lost the lot—result of evil courses,
> The race-horse brought an end to my race-horses.
> . . . . . The Whistler do I see;
> Oh, Faust! your knocking gave me such a turn,
> A knock turn from a Whistler none would spurn."

The topical allusions are quite up to date and the lyrics smooth.

An excellent Mephistopheles is found in Mr. E. J. Lonnen, who plays with immense spirit, and gains a nightly encore for his songs, "I shall have 'em by-and-by," and "Enniscorthy" (written for him by R. Martin).

Miss Florence St. John is an ideal burlesque actress, so skilfully does she blend the innocence of the real Marguerite with the faster proclivities of her modern prototype. On the opening night it was noticed with regret that full advantage had not been taken of the exquisite voice Miss St. John possesses; but since then, in addition to the numbers, "A simple little maid," and "Fond heart, oh, tell me why," two other ballads have been introduced, and it need hardly be said that all are charmingly sung. Miss Fanny Robina, the Faust, has a pleasant voice, is a nimble little dancer, and is a decided acquisition. Mr. George Stone is exceedingly droll as Valentine, and brings down the house with his song, "A Soldier born," and his mock-heroic curse. Miss Jennie McNulty is a pretty and pleasing Siebel, Miss Maria Jones quaint and droll as Martha, and Miss Lillian Price heads an eccentric pas de quatre most gracefully, ably seconded by Miss Florence Levey. Mr. Harry Parker does all that is possible with the part of Old Faust.

There are several attractive choruses, which are artistically rendered by a bevy of fair young ladies, who appear in tasteful dresses, uniforms, &c. The scenery is beautiful.

As usual, Mr. George Edwardes has spared no expense in the production, to which Mr. Charles Harris has contributed his accustomed skill, and "Faust up to Date" will certainly fill the Gaiety for many a night to come.

"NADGY."

New Comic Opera, in three acts, by ALFRED MURRAY, music composed by F. CHASSAIGNE.
First produced in London at the Avenue Theatre, Wednesday, November 7, 1888.

The Count Maximilien de Rosen	Mr. JOSEPH TAPLEY.
Rakoczy	Mr. ALEC MARSH.
Margrave of Bobrumkoff	Mr. J. J. DALLAS.
Felix de Faragas, P.M.D.D.	Mr. ARTHUR ROBERTS.

Konrad	Miss CLARA GRAHAME.
Ladislas	Miss FLORENCE MELVILLE.
Etelka	Miss GIULIA WARWICK.
Dame Angelia	Miss SALLIE TURNER.
Nadgy	Mdlle. VANONI.

The music in "Falka," M. Chassaigne's former work, was so favourably received here that London playgoers were naturally curious to judge for themselves as to whether the French or the American verdict passed on "Nadgy" was correct. When produced in Paris, on February 13, 1886, under the title of "Les Noces Improvisées," it certainly did not hit the public taste, whereas in New York it was only withdrawn after a run of 150 nights to make way for "The Yeomen of the Guard." Taken altogether, it may be said that M. Chassaigne's music in his later work has produced a favourable impression here, though it was not so characteristically Hungarian as was expected. Many of the airs are lively and tripping; the choruses are for the most part effective, and the Rakoczy March is several times introduced with much advantage.

Mr. Alfred Murray has cleverly told the story of the loves of the Princess Etelka and the Hungarian patriot Rakoczy, the stumbling-block to their union being the fact that she is a ward of the Austrian Emperor's, who has determined she shall marry De Rosen. He is in love with Nadgy, a première danseuse, to whom also his uncle, the Margrave of Bobrumkoff, has paid court. Etelka and De Rosen, thus both being averse to their union, conspire together; they are nominally married, because they have learnt that they can appeal to Austrian law to dissolve the union within twenty-four hours. Rakoczy, with his confederate Faragas, stirs up the people to revolt. Etelka, the rightful heiress to the throne, is pronounced Queen of Hungary; she dissolves her marriage, and gives her hand to Rakoczy, and De Rosen pairs off with Nadgy. Mdlle. Vanoni filled the title-rôle with the utmost spirit, proving herself thoroughly comic and an accomplished ballerina. Her songs were received with more than favour, and her duet with Faragas, "Zig-a-Zig," gained a double encore, and has already become a popular melody. Mr. Arthur Roberts, as Faragas, disguised as a professor of dancing and deportment, is, as usual, the life and soul of the piece; his song, "Deportment," he renders one of the funniest ever heard, and in the last act, where he poses as a Roman laurel-crowned tribune, and delivers a topical address to the multitude, he caused shrieks of laughter. Miss Giulia Warwick sang with much taste as Etelka; the most telling number allotted to her, "Lightly, Lightly," with its accompanying chorus, was charmingly rendered. Mr. Alec Marsh, as Rakoczy, was heard to most advantage in the patriotic song, "At the Signal to Battle," which he sang splendidly. Mr. Tapley as De Rosen showed great improvement in his acting, and deservedly gained a most cordial encore for the exquisite waltz melody, "Let me woo thee." The parts of the Margrave and Dame Angelia were humorously filled by Mr. Dallas and Miss Sallie Turner, but neither of these characters were worthy of their powers.

As usual at the Avenue, the minor parts are well filled, and the chorus is composed of pretty young ladies, who are well trained, and do full justice to the several tuneful and skilfully written melodies set down for them. The costumes, by M. Alias, are beautiful, and the stage management of Mr. Marius perfect. Mr. Watkin, the manager, may register another successful production.

Mr. Pettitt's latest drama had already achieved a signal success in Australia, and at Manchester, where it was produced at the Theatre Royal on July 30, before it was submitted to a London audience. The applause bestowed on it throughout its first evening here, and the crowded houses it has since drawn, have established its reputation. Granted that if some of its incidents are not altogether new the dialogue is; and do we not bestow our greatest praise on the chef who can give us toothsome dishes made only from the ordinary meats by dressing them in such a way that they shall appeal to our appetites as something quite fresh and novel? Here we have Jack Dudley, a hearty, honourable young Englishman, in love with Lilian Melford. Her guardian, Joseph Stillwood, has received a yearly income for her from her father in Australia, but the old rogue has appropriated the money to his own purposes, and, having learnt that the girl will probably be wealthy, has determined that she shall marry his good-for-nothing son Robert. Dick Melford, the father, however, turns up in time to prevent this, and so Jack and Lilian are married. They go to Paris for their honeymoon, en route for Australia, and here Jack, being of a forgiving disposition, makes a friend of Robert Stillwood, who borrows money of him and takes him to a gambling-house kept by Madame Vallerie. Count Paul de Renal, a coxcomb who imagines every woman to be in love with him, visits Lilian during her husband's absence and presses his suit upon her, and, being repulsed, threatens that her name shall become a by-word in every club in Paris. Jack Dudley returns in time to hear this threat, and, at the instigation of Robert Stillwood, follows the Count to Madame Vallerie's, and, as the Frenchman is repeating the scandal, knocks him down. The Count has won large sums from Tom Bassett, and has them in his pocket-book. Stillwood is in desperate want of money. Jean de Lussac suggests that the Count should be robbed, and so, as he is leaving the courtyard of the hotel, Robert stabs him, and, after rifling his pockets, conceals himself. Dudley, who just then leaves the house, discovers the body as the police are entering to make a raid, and is at once denounced by Stillwood as the murderer. Dudley is tried and condemned to be guillotined, and is trying to escape from La Roquette when his wife rushes in with a reprieve. Lilian is on board the "Australasian" steamer on her way to rejoin her father. Two poor fellows have been picked up in an open boat the night before: one has died, the other proves to be Dudley, who has escaped from the French settlement of New Caledonia. Husband and wife speak to each other without daring to acknowledge their relationship, and give us one of the best and most exquisitely written and acted scenes in the play. A French man-o'-war boat comes alongside in search of escaped convicts. Dudley, when summoned to give an account of himself, declares that he is a seaman whose ship has gone down, but Robert Stillwood again denounces him as the murderer of Count Paul de Renal. The commander of the steamer, Captain Land (excellently played by Mr. Edmund Gurney), refuses to surrender him. The last act takes place in Sydney

Harbour. Dudley's innocence is proved by Jean de Lussac, who has also escaped from New Caledonia, to which station he discovers he has been sent through the information of Robert Stillwood, his confederate in various nefarious transactions. Jean accuses Stillwood of being the real murderer, and the charge is brought home to him from a banknote being found upon him which was known to be in the possession of the Count when he was stabbed.

Such are the principal incidents, lightened by the loves and misunderstandings of Tom Bassett and Lucy Nettleford, played in a capitally light and comic vein by Mr. E. W. Garden and Miss Webster, and the sturdiness of character and dry humour of Mr. Julian Cross as Dick Melford. Mr. Henry Neville has not for a considerable time past shown us more thoroughly how sterling an actor he is, so vigorous and yet so full of manly pathos. Miss Mary Rorke too was the actress suited to the character of Lilian Melford, a fresh honest girl and a pure loving wife. Mr. Robert Pateman, under whose direction the play was produced, gives us a remarkably strong depiction of character in Jean de Lussac, light and frivolous as a Frenchman so frequently is, yet a very tiger when he finds he has been betrayed, and his final scene when seized with epilepsy was almost painfully realistic. Mr. W. L. Abingdon gives a finished picture of the uncompromising villain. Mr. Bucklaw was good as the French Count. Mr. Eugène Mayeur cleverly sketched an Englishman who passes as a French waiter, and Mr. Philip Darwin did well as the French officer Lieut. Victor. I must not forget Mr. H. H. Morrell, who was very amusing as the Chicago "gentleman who has made his pile in pork." The first, fourth and fifth acts are certainly the best, but the weakness of the others is compensated for by the strength of these, and Mr. Pettitt may be congratulated on his work.

"THE BALLOON."

Three-act Farcical Comedy by J. H. Darnley and George Manville Fenn.
First produced at Terry's Theatre, on the afternoon of Tuesday, November 13, 1888.

Dr. Glynn	Mr. Charles Glenney.	Todd	Mr. E. A. Anson.
Captain Cameron	Mr. Forbes Dawson.	Grace Wentworth ..	Miss Florence Wood.
Mr. Aubrey Fitz-John	Mr. Charles Groves.	Miss Vere	Miss Gabrielle Goldney.
Dr. Boyton	Mr. Geo. Raiemond.	Mrs. Rippendale ..	Miss Susie Vaughan.
David	Mr. Sam Whitaker.	Mrs. Theresa Fitz-John	Miss Caroline Elton.

Any manager in want of a play that will keep his audience in fits of laughter from the rise to the fall of the curtain should certainly lose no time in securing "The Balloon." In their former collaboration, "The Barrister," the authors produced a very amusing play, but in this their latest effort they have shown a skill in construction, in situation, and humour that quite equals, if it does not surpass, the merits of "Confusion" and any plays of that character. Dr. Glynn is a young medico engaged to Grace Wentworth; her aunt, Mrs. Theresa Fitz-John, suffering from an attack of indigestion, comes to the surgery, and the doctor then and there mixes her a draught which she is to take on reaching home. Captain Cameron, an old friend of Glynn's, comes to tell him of his intention of crossing the Channel from Dover (where the action of the play takes place) in a balloon. Whilst Cameron is left alone, Miss Vere enters in a dreadful state of mind about her constant companion, a St. Bernard dog, Fifine, which is suffering from some canine malady. Miss Vere takes Cameron for the doctor and implores his help. Cameron, enamoured of the young lady but detesting her dog, which has resisted all his friendly overtures, determines to prescribe for it effectually, so takes a good dose of strychnine with him, leaving the bottle from which it was drawn on the table. Glynn, some four years previously, has paid some attention and written some foolish love letters to a handsome supposed widow, Mrs. Rippendale, who unexpectedly turns up and demands the fulfilment of his promise of marriage. Glynn repudiates any such idea, and has hardly got rid of her when Mr. Aubrey Fitz-John, a bibulous but most amusing scamp, appears and demands hush money, as he also is aware of Glynn's past flirtations. The doctor silences him with a bottle of brandy in an adjoining room, when Miss Vere rushes in screaming "She's dead." Glynn's eye catches sight of the strychnine bottle on the table, and jumps to the conclusion that he has inadvertently killed the aunt of his intended, and in a wild state of excitement rushes off to the beach, jumps into the balloon, the ropes are let go, and he is carried out to sea. The next morning the papers are full of the balloon having been picked up, and that Dr. Glynn must have been drowned. He, however, has been landed on a hedge, and returns in a most dishevelled state to recount his experiences in a ridiculously ludicrous scene. In the meantime Fitz-John has gone to his wife's house (for he is the husband of Mrs. Theresa Fitz-John, whom he has deserted), and, believing her to be dead, has laid hands on everything of value that he can, and hides his plunder for the time in an alcove in Glynn's room. Grace, who has heard something of Glynn's past flirtations, brings back all his presents and puts them in the same place, leaving a note, saying, "Look into the alcove." Mrs. Fitz-John comes to upbraid the doctor, and, hearing her husband's voice, hides in the recess, so that when Glynn finds Grace's letter, and draws the curtains, he sees what he imagines to be the ghost of his victim. However, he is soon released from his troubles, for Mrs. Rippendale proves to be the first wife of the brandy-loving Fitz-John, who has committed a splendid bigamy, and Grace readily takes Glynn into her favour again. Miss Vere's heart is softened towards Cameron by the presentation of another St. Bernard, who appears on the scene, and Fitz-John is handed over to the tender mercies of Mrs. Rippendale. The first act quaintly leads up to the development of the story, the second act is one of the best ever written, and the third act is but little behind it in genuine, clever, and honest fun. Mr. Charles Glenney emphatically scored as the badgered and bewildered Dr. Glynn throughout; his description of his aerial voyage was a splendid piece of mock tragedy. Mr. Forbes Dawson played even better than usual as Captain Cameron; he was light and easy, without being so mercurial as he sometimes is. Mr. Charles Groves was very amusing as the good-for-nothing, merry, selfish rascal, Aubrey Fitz-John; and Mr. Sam Whitaker excellent as the doddering old family servant, David. Grace Whitworth, an ingenue part, was brightly played by Miss Florence Wood. Miss Gabrielle Goldney just hit the right line of extravagance as Miss Vere, and Miss Susie Vaughan was handsome and attractive as the adventuress, Mrs. Rippendale, making much of a part that depended entirely on its proper conception. The matinée was given by Messrs. Charles Groves and C. Irving Bacon.

"ATALANTA."

A Burlesque, in three acts, by George P. Hawtrey, music arranged and composed by Arthur E. Dyer.

First produced at the Strand Theatre, Saturday, November 17, 1888.

Schœneus, King of Scyros	Mr. W. F. Hawtrey.
Lysimachus	Mr. T. Squire.
Hippomenes	Mr. F. Wyatt.
Menander	Miss Nellie Bennett.
Leontes	Miss Florence Lancaster.
Socrates	Mr. Fleming Norton.
Pansanias	Miss Stephanie Baring.
Philip	Miss Grace Baring.
Charicles	Miss Stella Leigh.
Orpheus	Mr. F. Wensley.
Constable	Mr. Rudolph Lewis.
Messenger	Miss Mary Glover.
Daphne	Miss Minnie Cunningham.
Lalage	Miss Lulu du Cane.
Amaryllis	Miss Jessie Collier.
Penelope	Miss Carlotta Zerbini.
Aphrodite	Miss Alma Stanley.
Atalanta	Miss Marie Linden.

Though the reception of "Atalanta," on its first night, was not altogether a cordial one, in consequence of the third act being disliked, later performances have been received with favour, indeed with considerable enthusiasm. Mr. Hawtrey has, perhaps, believed that there is a large section of our community who are quite at home, not only in everything appertaining to racing, but even in the jargon of the betting-ring and the individualities of its most prominent supporters. And so he has copiously sprinkled his dialogue with sporting phrases, tipsters' slang, &c.; but, at the same time, it must be admitted that he has extracted a great deal of fun out of the fleet-footed Atalanta's exploit. Schœneus, her father, is a gentleman fond of sport, but who cares always to be on the winning horse; his prime minister, Lysimachus, is also steward of the meetings, which, should they not come off, his head will. Hippomenes, in love with Atalanta, whom he has saved from an unpleasant immersion, is a favourite of beauteous Aphrodite. The lovely goddess, strange to say, forwards his love affair, and, instead of the golden apples that shall stay fair Atalanta's speed, the Venus of the Greeks bestows on him the box of which the contents are to be thrown in his competitor's path. These are what ladies would call "a duck of a bonnet" and "a sweet dress." Need it be said that the temptation to pick them up is too strong for Atalanta, and that Hippomenes wins the race and her by a short head.

Mr. W. F. Hawtrey acted Schœneus with a mock dignity and unctuous humour that told excellently, and was well backed up by Mr. J. Squire as his minister Lysimachus, whose fun was slyer but none the less taking. Mr. F. Wyatt made every line tell, his dancing was as nimble and as eccentric as has been seen for a long time, and his songs well sung. He kept the stage thoroughly alive. Miss Marie Linden, always bright and amusing, gave a capital imitation, burlesque of course, of Miss Mary Anderson. Miss Alma Stanley looked the personification of the queenly beautiful Aphrodite, and sang very sweetly, so sweetly indeed that it was a pity she was not oftener heard. Miss Mary Glover also proved herself a captivating songstress as well as actress, and Miss Minnie Cunninghame danced very gracefully.

The third act contained a great deal that might with improvement have been completely done away with; the songs of the trainers, jockeys, and gentlemen owners of horses fell very flat, as did the absurdity of leading the competitors about like horses, though their preliminary canter in the shape of a dance was loudly applauded and encored. This act has now been materially improved: the modern racing business, songs, &c., are done away with, and the scene is laid in front of a classic temple.

The mise-en-scène generally was exceedingly pretty, and the dresses, designed by the Hon. Lewis Wingfield, were harmonious in colour and most tasteful. The scenery was good, and the music contained some very pretty numbers.

"A HIGHLAND LEGACY."

Play, in one act, by BRANDON THOMAS.

First produced in public at the Strand Theatre, Saturday, November 17, 1888.

Gordon McDonnell	Mr. PERCY LYNDAL.	Job Fixem ..	Mr. A. EDGEMORE.
Tammy Tamson ..	Mr. BRANDON THOMAS.	Mrs. Butler ..	Miss CARLOTTA ZERBINI.
Mr. Dobson	Mr. WILLIAM WYES.	Clara	Miss STELLA LEIGH.
Cavendish Howley	Mr. GRAHAME WENTWORTH.

Mr. Brandon Thomas has produced a charming little piece, to the success of which his own finished acting very materially contributed. Under the semblance of an old Highland servitor and piper, Tammy Tamson, a laird discovers for himself whether the feud that existed between his late brother and himself shall be extended to his nephew, Gordon McDonnell. Though in poverty, he soon finds out that his future heir is a noble-hearted, high-spirited young fellow, and the delighted uncle sets all matters straight by reconciling Mr. Dobson, a vulgar, purse-proud stock-jobber, to allow of a union between his daughter, Clara, and Gordon. Cavendish Howley, an actor and staunch ally of Gordon's, also finds a friend, as does the kind-hearted landlady, Mrs. Gordon. Mr. Brandon Thomas played Tammy Tamson with a quaint and humorous pathos that were worthy of the highest praise. Mr. Grahame Wentworth and Mr. A. Edgemore were also good in their several parts, but Mr. Percy Lyndal struck me as being a little too melodramatic for such a piece, the effect, perhaps, of the round of characters he has lately been playing.

"THE LADY OF LYONS."

Play in five acts, by LORD LYTTON.

Revived at the Shaftesbury Theatre, Monday, November 19, 1888.

Claude Melnotte ..	Mr. FORBES ROBERTSON.	Captain Gervais ..	Mr. S. HERBERTE-BASING.
Colonel Damas ..	Mr. MACKINTOSH.	Captain Dupont ..	Mr. GEORGE SELDON.
Beauseant	Mr. BASSETT ROE.	Major Desmoulins	Mr. PHILLIPS.
Glavis	Mr. ALLEN THOMAS.	Notary	Mr. HAMMOND.
Mons. Deschappelles	Mr. CHARLES ARNOLD.	Pauline	Miss WALLIS.
Landlord of the "Golden Lion"..	Mr. ARTHUR FENWICK.	Madame Deschappelles	Miss ROBERTHA ERSKINE.
Gaspar	Mr. MATTHEW BRODIE.	Widow Melnotte ..	Mrs. H. LEIGH.

The management had announced the revival of Lord Lytton's play for Saturday, November 17, and a large audience had in consequence assembled. But the performance did not come off through a most extraordinary contretemps. The iron curtain refused to budge an inch, and though every attempt was made to raise it, after waiting very patiently and good-humouredly for upwards of an hour, the expectant crowd left the house on its being announced from the stage that the play could not go on that evening. On Monday, however, the difficulty had been surmounted, and a decidedly satisfactory rendering of "The Lady of Lyons" was given. It was specially interesting from the new readings adopted by the two principal characters. Miss Wallis had evidently carefully studied the character of Pauline: the struggle for mastery between pride and the love that almost engrossed her was well exhibited, her passion was for the most part genuine, and her tenderness womanly; the lines were excellently delivered, and her actions full of grace and charm. Mr. Forbes Robertson had also conceived a fresh interpretation of the low-born but aspiring gardener's son. His Claude Melnotte had in it much that was quite original; it was a robust, yet poetical performance; there was no playing to the gods, yet every line told, and some of the business was new and most effective, though the kneeling to Pauline, at the close of the speech, "Dost thou like the picture," struck me as out of keeping with the wooing by a prince of one beneath him in station, albeit her slave. Miss Wallis and Mr. Robertson were enthusiastically recalled at the end of each act, and certainly should make the revival a success, perfectly as it is mounted in every respect and dressed in the handsomest manner in rich and appropriate costumes, for which Messrs. Nathan are responsible. Of the other characters, Mr. Matthew Brodie was truly excellent as Gaspar, Mr. Allen Thomas good as Glavis; but Mr. Bassett Roe was tame as Beauseant. Miss Robertha Erskine was an amusing Madame Deschappelles, Mr. Mackintosh a bluff and somewhat original Colonel Damas.

Mrs. John Wood, the talented manageress of the Court Theatre, made her first appearance in London at the Princess's in the character of Miss Miggs in Watts Phillips's "Barnaby Rudge" on November 12, 1866, having previously acted in the provinces and made a reputation in America. After revisiting the United States, the fair subject of our photograph assumed the management of the St. James's Theatre in October, 1869, and later made a great hit as Pocahontas in "La Belle Sauvage" there. Another part which she played that materially assisted in the success of the play was that of Georgette in Sutherland Edwards's adaptation of "Fernande." Amongst Mrs. Wood's best assumptions during her management of the St. James's may be mentioned Jenny Leatherlungs in "Jenny Lind at Last" and Anne Bracegirdle in "An Actress by Daylight." Mrs. John Wood again went to America, where she was welcomed back with the greatest favour, and reappeared in London at the Queen's in November, 1873, as Philippa Chester in Charles Reade's drama "The Wandering Heir," and also appeared at the Criterion on its opening, March 21, 1874, in "An American Lady," and at the Gaiety on December 19 of that year as Mrs. Page in "The Merry Wives of Windsor." On December 2, 1878, Mrs. Wood obtained great praise for her conception of the character of Mrs. Denham in Mr. James Albery's comedy "The Critic." Of late years no play produced at the old Court Theatre would have been considered complete had not Mrs. John Wood's name appeared in the bills, and it is only necessary to recall her assumptions of Lady Henmarsh in "The Millionaire" (September 27, 1883), Mrs. Sara Webster in "Margery's Lovers" (February 18, 1884), Mrs. Dick Chetwyn in "Young Mr. Winthrop" (November 6, 1884), Mrs. Poskett in "The Magistrate" (March 21, 1885), Miss Dyott in "The Schoolmistress" (March 27, 1886), and Georgina Tidman in "Dandy Dick" (January 27, 1887). At the new Court, over which Mrs. John Wood now reigns managerially with such success, the character of Mrs. Jannaway in "Mamma" (September 24, 1888) has entitled her to another laurel wreath.

The Criterion Smoking Concert Society commenced its fourth season on November 5, and Mr. Vernon Heath, the chairman on the occasion, had provided an excellent programme, in which figured the names of Messrs. M. S. Rubinstein, Frederick Wood, Walter Van Noorden, Seymour Jackson, Richard Mackway, and Signor Dabeiro, the accomplished mandolinist. It was announced during the evening that Mr. Carl Rosa had accepted the honorary presidency of the society. The concerts are held fortnightly and are always enjoyable.

By some strange error, Miss Edith Woodworth's first appearance was announced, in the November number of The Theatre, as having taken place seventeen years ago. I need scarcely say that anyone who has seen Miss Woodworth would at once know it should have read seven years ago; Father Time would too enviously have marked his furrows on features that at present show no trace of his attack.

A most charming little book has reached me, "By-Ways in Book-Land," by W. Davenport Adams (Elliot Stock, Paternoster Row). The author "picks here a flower" of verse and there a "leaf" of book lore, making up so delightful a posy, and recalling so vividly the perfume of larger nosegays, that the reader, whilst enjoying his short "ramble" in the garden of literature, will have opened up to him larger excursions into the wider field of half-forgotten authors.

Amongst the new music published by Charles Woolhouse, 81, Regent Street, I may mention "L'Adieu," an exquisite Romance for violin and pianoforte, by G. J. Rubini; two songs, with violoncello parts, by Gerard F. Cobb; "Sleep," by Mrs. J. E. Vernham; a Berceuse for violin, by J. Jacques Haakman; a stirring Marche des Mousquetaires, by G. Saint George; a charming Bolero and song, "Suspense," by Sydney Shaw; and a characteristic pianoforte piece, "The Mill Wheel," and three pretty two-part songs, by Herbert F. Sharp; also a very tender Romance for piano, by Eugene Wagner. All of these are worthy of note.

"The Radical, or The Honour of the House," played for the first time at Beaufort House on November 6, possesses very considerable merit and may certainly encourage its author, Mr. Ernest Genet, to persevere in his career as a dramatist. The characters were filled by St. Mark's Old Boys, and were more than fairly represented for amateurs. They were assisted by Miss Kathleen O'Connor and Miss Louise Franklin.

For the first time, I should think, in dramatic record, four new pieces from the pen of one author were produced on the same evening. This occurred at the St. George's Hall on November 10, and their names will be found duly recorded in the list of productions. I can only regret that all four were, rom a public point of view, unworthy of notice, though "The Celebrated Case" may answer its purpose at Christmas parties.

The building once known as the Bijou Theatre, Archer Street, Bayswater, has been remodelled, very prettily decorated and generally improved, and now solicits public notice as the "Victoria Hall." It opened its doors on Thursday, November 15, with a dramatic performance which commenced with "Love Wins," Mr. Savile Clarke's earliest production, and which he wrote in collaboration with Mr. Du Terreau. Its perfections were not fully shown. Due meed of praise, however, must be accorded to Mr. Wilton Dale (though in make-up and voice he did so closely resemble Mr. Arthur Cecil), to Mrs. Conyers d'Arcy, Miss Florence Bright, and Miss Charlotte Morland. The last-named lady produced, for the first time, her farce, "The Matrimonial Agency," which is smartly written and very funny, and should prove invaluable to amateurs even if it be not accepted for a regular evening bill.

Monseur Milo de Meyer's Private Séance of Magnetism and Hypnotism, given at St. James's Hall on November 19, was well attended. The medical profession especially mustered in full force, and was represented by some of its leading members. M. de Meyer gave several of his most curious experiments, some of which were fully described in the article which appeared in the October number of THE THEATRE; he was warmly greeted by an appreciative audience, and deserves to meet with success. The public séances will be given every night at the same hall until Christmas.

Mr. Kirwan lately delivered, before "The Church and Stage Guild," a short lecture on Elocution, which so briefly yet pithily brought home to his hearers the lack of knowledge that generally existed on this most important art as to convince his audience that he was a complete master of his subject. Mr. Kirwan divided his reading under three heads: voice production, articulation, and facial expression and gesture, and explained the method to be adopted in acquiring these so clearly that, should he decide on printing his address, it would prove most useful to both the clerical and dramatic profession.

The Christmas number of the Lady's Pictorial just published is one of the best ever produced. The illustrations by Bernard Partridge, Maurice Grieffenhagen, Dudley Hardy, F. H. Townsend, &c., are excellent, and besides charming stories, "The Young King," by Oscar Wilde, and "For Whose Sake," by John Strange Winter, there are other tales that cannot but be read with pleasure. There is also issued with the number a very droll photogravure, a "Merry-go-round," by Louis Wain, and last, by no means least, a most exquisite coloured supplement, "Lady Love," which from its perfection in execution has so attracted the attention of our French neighbours that the proprietors of L'Illustré in Paris have instructed our English Lady's Pictorial to reproduce the picture for their issue.

It amused me to read the following paragraphs, intended to be smart, but essentially thoughtless:—

"Talking of the Globe reminds me that the critic of the Daily Telegraph was astoundingly severe the other day on the author of 'That Telegram,' the farce which was produced at the theatre in question last Monday. Mr. Clement Scott accuses the playwright referred to of 'propagating pernicious doctrines under the pretence of fun.' This is surely rather a ponderous indictment against the author of a simple curtain-raiser, who had in all probability no doctrines at all, pernicious or otherwise, to propagate, and whose sole object in the production was to obtain author's fees and bold advertisement.

"In his critique of 'ThatTelegram' Mr. Scott contends that a dramatic author should endeavour to depict life as it might be, rather than life as it unfortunately is. There I join issue with him entirely, and I shelter myself behind that even higher authority than the Daily Telegraph critic who opined that the mission of the stage was to hold the mirror up to nature. Anyhow, amusement and not doctrine is what people want in a farce!"

So far as I can remember, for the subject matter of a very vulgar farce has almost entirely escaped my memory, the idea of the play was to show in a funny way how a contemptible cad, who had a good, honest, virtuous wife, could hoodwink her sufficiently to "carry on" with some flashy barmaid. He succeeded, the wife was deceived and the curtain fell on the triumph of the coward and liar. Our irresponsible and flippant paragraph writer says that what the people want in farce is "amusement, not doctrine." Well, if it amuses him to see honest women deceived and to reward with laughter the silly tricks of an immoral clerk, that is his business. For my own part I do not see any fun in it whatever. To quote the grand Shaksperian doctrine of "holding the mirror up to nature" in this connection is an example of the cheap rubbish that nowadays passes current as solemn truth. If this be nature, to deceive women and claim credit for the deception, then God help nature. Our modern playgoer says that the only object of the author of a bit of contemptible vulgarity was "to obtain author's fees and bold advertisement." Well, for my part, even in a farce, I should be sorry to obtain author's fees, or bold advertisement, by telling my fellow-creatures that it was a clever and commendable thing to trick and bamboozle a true, trusting and loving woman. We always expect some good motive, and, except in the "New Magdalen," I don't think I have seen many plays where vice was deliberately rewarded. Holding the mirror up to nature, indeed! This is not nature, it is the diseased matter, the typhoid of the modern drama. If the author of this silly farce had no pernicious doctrine to propagate, why did he imagine it would be funny to represent a man doing a dishonourable thing and glorying in his trick over a woman who honestly loved him? Surely two sillier paragraphs were never written than those attempting to justify the comic glorification of evil, its canonisation of corrupt motive!

Very numerous applications having been made for the March number of 1884, in consequence of its containing the likeness of Mr. H. B. Conway, and that number being unfortunately out of print, in accordance with repeated requests his portrait appears in this issue. Mr. Conway was born in 1850, and educated at Rossall School and Berlin University. He made his début at the Olympic as Bernard in "Without Love," in November, 1872, and played David Copperfield in "Little Em'ly." On the revival of Richelieu at the Lyceum, September 27, 1873, he appeared as François, and during subsequent seasons as Christian ("The Bells"), Lord Moray ("Charles the First"), Comte de Flamarens ("Philip"), Osric ("Hamlet"). He opened at the Haymarket in August, 1857, as Dick Dowlais ("Heir at Law"), and on January 17, 1876, played Romeo. At this theatre and in the provinces Mr. Conway has sustained the following characters with the late Miss Adelaide Neilson:—Orlando ("As You Like It"), Lucio ("Measure for Measure"), Lord Tinsel ("The Hunchback"), Sebastian ("Twelfth Night"), and other important rôles. On November 2, 1876, he appeared at the Royal Court as Fred Meredith in "The Brothers," a remarkably good impersonation. Mr. Conway joined the old Prince of Wales's Theatre company for juvenile lead in August, 1878, and played Julian Beauclerc in "Diplomacy;" on May 31, 1879, Charlie in "Good for Nothing," and Harold Dyecaster in "Heads and Tails." On the reopening of the Haymarket, January 31, 1880, he appeared as Alfred Evelyn in "Money," and subsequently as Lord Beaufoy in "School," De Neuville in "Plot and Passion," Mr. Wentworth in "A Lesson," Angus McAlister in "Ours," Philip Eden in "Odette," George D'Alroy in "Caste," and Captain Bradford in "Peril." Mr. Conway has lately been touring during the summer and autumn months with his own company, which has principally played the older English comedies, for some of the characters in which Mr. Conway has a particular aptitude. His latest permanent engagements have been at the Vaudeville Theatre, and one of the greatest hits he has ever made has been in the character of Joseph Andrews in "Joseph's Sweetheart," by Robert Buchanan, produced March 8, 1888.

Those who have been stirred by Mr. A. Moore's article on "Mummer Worship," which appeared in the Universal Review, may be interested to know that a series of articles under the same title are appearing weekly in The Society Herald. They are by Edward St. John Brevon, who writes in a trenchant manner on his subject; but, until the series be completed, it will be better, perhaps, only to notice the fact of their publication.

Mr. B. W. Ginsburg sends me the following note regarding the article on "The Grammar of the Upper Ten" in the November number of THE THEATRE, in which Mr. Palgrave Simpson says that "you was" is a more outrageous delinquency in grammar than is usual even among the Upper Ten. In Ovid's "Epistles: Œnone to Paris," translated into verse by Mr. John Cooper, we read

> "Tho' now a prince, not yet so great you was,
> When, a famed nymph, I stooped to your embrace;
> A slave you was (forgive what I have said),
> Slave as you was, I took you to my bed."

The above is taken from an edition of Ovid's Epistles "translated by several hands," 8th edition, London, printed for Jacob Tonson, Shakespear's Head, Strand, 1712; and, as the "several hands" include Pope, it may surely be considered a classical authority for the "delinquency."
